

Intel Writer

In literature if fame has overtaken you to dwell on one work is not so simple. An experienced reader requires continuation and new stories. Just recall Joan Rowling, whose Harry Potter books have become the most popular and best-selling books in the world. And in Russia, as research for 2018 shows, Boris Akunin and Tatyana Ustinova read the most. Their works are released in hundreds of thousands of copies. Two more authors have total circulation of over a million.

The prima donna of the ironic detective and the crazy optimist this is the year Daria Dontsova has retained these titles, just like the status of the most published writer in Russia. Last year, she released 1.53 million copies of books. Detectives Dontsova grab like pies, and she, in turn, only has time to compose new stories. Dontsova's productivity is simply amazing: she writes a novel for a month. And today she has on her account about two hundred works. By the way, the writer got into the US Guinness Book of Records as the most prolific author and the highest paid. For each new book, Dontsova receives 200 thousand dollars and even enters the Forbes list with an annual income of 2 million. And also, based on her novels, they make series. But the work of Dontsova is not limited only to the detective genre. The writer produces cooking recipes and adventures for children.

Essay Writer

In children's literature, it is not she and not even Joan Rowling with Harry Potter who holds the championship. The most beloved children's writer among Russians is still Korney Ivanovich Chukovsky. In 2018, one and a half million books by the author were released more than the modern British writer Holly Webb, who became famous for her series of books about kittens and puppies and the detective girl Maisie Hitchens. It is unlikely that Chukovsky hoped for a big profit, but if he lived in our time, his Moidodyr and Aibolit would surely make him a millionaire. It is reported by Rambler.
